AAW EXPLORE! ARTICLE OF THE WEEK

- Woodworkers of West Central New York, Camillus, NY
- Portneuf Valley Woodturners Association, Pocatello, ID

In his article, "Celebrating the Functional Wooden Bowl: A Link to Nature," from the October 2011 issue of American Woodturner,

Joshua Friend talks about why he enjoys making wooden bowls for use. He says, "The mere presence of a handmade wooden object stirs something inside me; using that object provides something extra. It's a feeling hard to describe, but there is a peaceful humility involved. Perhaps this is why I take special pride in making wooden objects that will be treasured and used by someone. It is a way of sharing who I am and making my mark on the world." Other turners, including Judy Ditmer, Mike Mahoney, Glen Lucas, reflect on the allure of making wooden bowls.

AAW VIDEO SOURCE FLICK OF THE WEEK

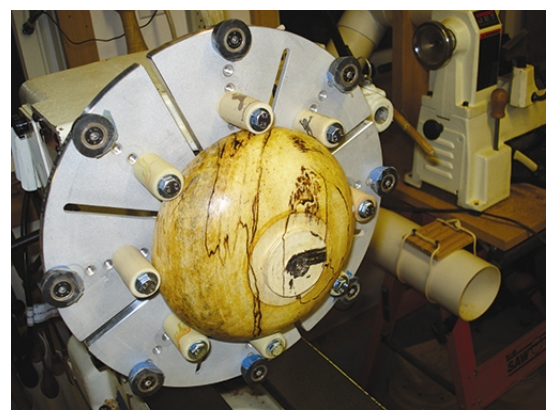

Christian Burchard, globe-trotting woodturner, sculptor, furniture-maker, house-builder, goat-tender, cheese-maker, and much more, reflects on his journey in woodturning in the 2018 AAW Symposium presentation, "A Life Made with These Hands: Predictable Unpredictability and the Nature of Wood." Additionally, Burchard discusses the importance of using one's hands and being creative in uncertain times, along with the pleasure of working with unpredictable materials and not knowing exactly where you're going. AAW TIP OF THE WEEK

Buttons for Jumbo/Cole Jaws

"Sometimes when using my jumbo/Cole-type jaws to finish the bottom of a bowl, I find the standard buttons are not tall enough. Looking around for something else to use, I noticed synthetic wine corks and decided to try them. I drilled through them on my lathe, held in a set of small spigot jaws. I added some M6-1 x 50mm bolts and the new, longer buttons work super. I have since discovered a commercial product similar to my idea, but mine uses something that would otherwise be thrown away, is fun to obtain (drink responsibly), and costs about $2. Also, they leave no black or other colored marks on the surface of the wood." ~ Don Orr Schenectady, NY

BATTY DEMOS AT MAUI WOODTURNERS

(The following is excerpted from "Turning Wood into Gems," by Colleen Uechi, Maui News.)

Curled wood shavings flew through the air as British woodturner Stuart Batty guided a long-handled tool across the surface of a block of koa. As the rough, squarish block transformed into the smooth, rounded base of a calabash bowl within a matter of minutes, Makawao woodturner Emiliano Achaval could hardly contain his delight. "He is just unbelievable," said Achaval, the president and founder of the Maui Woodturners Association. "Almost no sanding is needed when he's done." Read the rest of the story.

LEVI PERFECTS HER CRAFT

(The following is excerpted from "Groesbeck Woodturner Janice Levi Offers Insight on the 'Poplar' Hobby," by Alexandra Cannon, Groesbeck Journal.)

For more than 15 years, Groesbeck resident Janice Levi has been perfecting her craft of woodturning: creating jewelry, bowls, purses, Christmas ornaments, and more from her home. In her workshop, Levi explained how woodturning differs from woodworking and how the hobby has become an important part of her life. Though Levi fondly remembers as a child holding a turning tool to a piece of scrap wood mounted on her father's old Sears lathe, she didn't take up the hobby until later in life. ARTISTIC WOODTURNERS MEET

At the front of the room sits a large lathe, such as you'd see in the average well-equipped wood shop. Video cameras on either side are focused on the power tool, their images displayed on large monitors. About two dozen men and women are seated in front of the lathe, eagerly awaiting the morning's demonstration. This is the monthly meeting of the Artistic Woodturners of Northwest Florida, a diverse group devoted to the craft of turning, well, just about anything that can be shaped on a woodturning lathe. It's

BLOCH TURNS LAMP SHADES

(The following is excerpted from "WoodGlow, New London, New Hampshire," by Peg Lopata, Monadnock Table)

Peter Bloch, a self-taught woodturner from New London, New Hampshire, is like an explorer seeking out the nature of wood. While most of us see a tree as one of nature's most opaque creations, under Bloch's experienced hand, he recreates it into a translucent lampshade. Bloch's been working with wood for nearly 40 years, starting in his early 20s making wood sculptures, then later, making functional wood objects such as boxes and bowls. While working a burl vessel, which needed to be very thin, he began thinking about translucent wood. After
